It was a long time ambition while they were still young to establish a dude ranch in the mountains and that they did. April 26, 1949 is when they purchased from William Havel 160 acres and Earl and Ruth Riley's dream came true, "Riley's Lazy R Ranch".

In that year of 1949, Earl Riley was in the food brokerage business in Chicago

The Lazy R was located 2 miles west of town beside highway 24. The eight cottages were deluxe in every way and all faced Pikes Peak. Four of those cabins would accommodate four people and the other four would put up seven. The cottages were also all named after Native American Tribes. There was the Blackhawk, Cherokee, Mohawk, Ute, Shawnee, Comanche and Iroquois. They rented them out for $100 and $125 per week respectively. Each of the cabins were brand new that year and were completely furnished with a full bath, modern kitchen with electric stoves and refrigerators. Each cabin also had a screened porch enabling you to relax as Pikes Peak loomed in front of you. That weekly rate also included the daily use of horses and the unlimited use of Riley's nine hole golf course, which Earl described as "mighty rugged". And as a footnote, that would mean Riley's had the very first golf course in the Woodland Park area, even predating Dar Elder's Paint Pony Golf Course.

The Lazy R also had a large recreation hall with many activities to keep the guests occupied. In the summer of 1951 the Riley's added a complete kitchen in the lodge and invited people from Woodland Park to come try out their chef's cooking. Activities at the ranch included swimming, hiking, campfires, horseback riding lessons, fishing and sightseeing. The Riley's would also host regular outdoor get-together wiener roasts and hamburger fry's on Sunday nights and even guests from the nearby Rosebud Guest Ranch were invited. Large singalongs would take place by a big bonfire then games at the main lodge. During the Ute Trail Stampede, all the guests that desired would be transported to Woodland Park to watch the parade and attend the Saturday night dance and crowning of the new rodeo Queen. Woodland Park's Lazy R was named Guest Ranch of the Year in 1950 by the Bunte Candy Company of Chicago, Illinois.
